BARNEVELD, N.Y. -- One Oneida County village is on its way to dissolving. Officials from Barneveld held an informational session Thursday to discuss the potential impacts.

The topic was started by a group of residents, who presented the village board with a petition. Board members say the current operating budget is so small, it's nearly impossible to make improvements to the village. Some residents wonder if the infrastructure projects the village has been working toward would be forgotten by the town, including the installation of a new sewer system.

to the town to take care of our upkeep instead of the village."

It will go to a public vote on June 6. A study will be completed following the vote. If enough residents are opposed to what the study says, another vote can be done.

Village officials hope to dissolve by the end of the year.
